

SUSIE'S FAMILY STORY

by June.w

Christmas Eve of 2020.

A book was born to be,

Inspired by the warmth of Christmas cheer,

Susie's family came to me.

I hope this story spreads joy and light,

To children far and near,

Bringing love and warmth to every heart,

A gift throughout the year.

-June W

PART.023

SEASON 1, EPISODE 12: WHEN SUSIE MET MATRIX - EXECUTING THE PLAN

Tanya was doing her warm-up exercises, preparing for target training as part of her plans.

Hunter was being a helpful little boy, assisting in clearing the table. "Hunter is such a good baby!" Tanya exclaimed, smiling warmly at Susie. "Susie, I still have half an hour; let's talk about the plan and the last step of the five-step process now!"

Susie reciprocated the smile, "Sure, let's discuss it. Is it difficult to execute the plan?" Susie had some concerns, "Some of the plans I wrote may not be implemented, such as asking Paul to come back to deliver the pizza; he may not be willing. But I did draw everything according to your intention!"

Tanya offered her wisdom, "When you find things difficult, don't just stare at the problem. Look further away. Sometimes we focus so much on the problem itself that we need help finding the solution. When seeking solutions, try to listen to music, it can help relax your mind and spark creativity."

Susie nodded in agreement, "Yes, I hope that Paul can come back next month. He has put in a lot of effort for us, but I've been fixated on this issue and need help finding a solution."

Tanya continued, "Exactly! That's the key. In the final step, we need to identify all the issues that might hinder us from achieving our goals. When making plans this week, focus not only on the problems but also on your goals and dreams. This way, you can have a broader perspective."

Eggshell's lawyer then took out a piece of paper and began drawing for Susie, explaining a simple and easy-to-follow method. He asked Susie to imagine that her goal was like a house. "How many floors do you think we need to build for this house to achieve our goals?" Tanya asked.

Susie responded, "Three floors are required." Even little Hunter chimed in, "The third floor!"

Tanya clarified, "Which third floor?"

Susie explained, "The first floor is where Dad will find another job in the small town. The second floor is for Dad to return to the small town and earn money. The third floor is for me to get a job!"

Hunter surprised everyone with his ambition, "Yes, that is! We all need to find jobs, and I want to find a job too!"

Tanya agreed, "That's right! If both you and your father can find jobs, it should cover your family's expenses."

They drew three floors on paper: the first for Hunter's dad finding a job, the second for him earning additional income, and the third, a colorful spire, symbolizing Hunter's potential income.

Tanya emphasized the importance of creating detailed plans for each floor before combining them. They discussed the first room on the first floor, which was about finding a job. Susie explained that a job wasn't just about making money; it was also about emotional attachment, responsibility, and a sense of accomplishment.

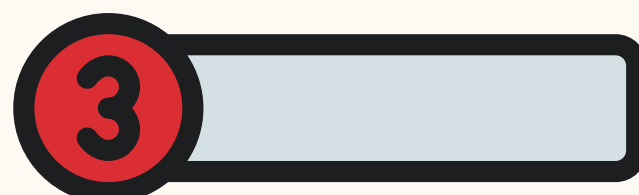

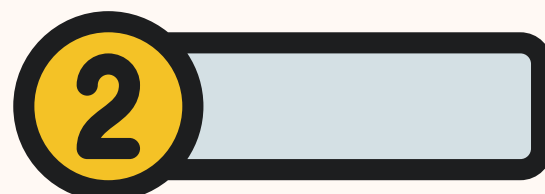

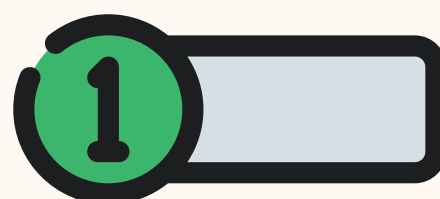

Tanya added, "Work is not only about making money, it's also about establishing emotional connections and carrying love and responsibility for family, friends, and the community."

The discussion continued with the second room on the first floor, focusing on discovering Paul's potential and hobbies to enrich their lives. Tanya encouraged Susie to explore different possibilities for Paul's skills and interests.

Afterward, Tanya introduced a method to generate creative solutions. They would create a matrix to analyze skills on one axis and the potential for expansion on the other. This would help them generate multiple ideas for each skill, allowing for creative solutions to emerge.

Hunter, eager to learn, asked for a visual representation of the process. Tanya encouraged him to organize their plans from the previous week using this method.

Tanya stressed the importance of execution. She advised them to form habits of execution, set clear intentions, and record their actions, time spent, and challenges faced. She also emphasized the need to prioritize tasks based on importance and individual energy levels throughout the day.

Finally, Tanya provided them with a daily schedule form to help organize their tasks and improve their execution skills.

Both Susie and Hunter expressed their understanding and gratitude for the valuable insights.

Tanya concluded the session, reminding them that execution was about three simple skills: believing in their ability to execute, choosing the most critical tasks, and diligently recording their actions and improvements.

Before leaving, Tanya reminded them to fill out the schedule form and said their goodbyes. Susie, now alone in the store, felt a newfound confidence and looked forward to executing her plans. She thought about her upcoming baby shower and felt excited about the new chapter in her life.

As she reflected on the past month, Susie realized that her life was changing for the better. She believed in herself, her family, and the support she had received from Eggshell's lawyer, whom she considered a real-life Santa Claus.

With a smile, Susie continued her work in the store, cherishing the connections she had formed with the small mountain town and looking forward to the bright future ahead.

Leaving the warehouse, Susie found Grandpa Ken still hard at work. She shared the progress she had made with him, and Grandpa Ken humorously remarked that it was time for her to pay the "tuition" for the valuable lessons she had learned. Susie asked Grandpa Ken to return early and instructed Hunter to come home once it got dark. She decided to stay behind in the store to organize plans, reports, and accounts for the month, ensuring that everything would be manageable for Grandpa Ken in the coming month.

Susie couldn't help but feel that her life was filled with happiness. She had grown into an incredibly optimistic person.

Susie glanced at the calendar in the store and made a note to meet with Eggshell's lawyer again before giving birth. She wanted to ensure a smooth execution of her plans. January 23, 2021, was marked as the day for their video call. She sent a message to Tanya, who promptly agreed to the plan.

Alone in the store, Susie felt a sense of weariness creeping in. She missed Paul, reminiscing about the New Year celebrations and skiing trips they had shared in the past. The warmth of the Christmas season and the joy of eating cheese fondue with loved ones came to mind. She also yearned for her parents and parents-in-law. However, what occupied her thoughts most was the need to move her plans into the implementation phase quickly. She eagerly anticipated the arrival of the little golden egg and wanted to begin executing her plans as soon as possible. Susie acknowledged that there was still much to learn as she navigated the challenges of motherhood.

In the afternoon, the store became livelier as friends stopped by to inquire about the upcoming baby shower. Susie had almost forgotten about it, but now she remembered. The baby shower was scheduled for the 20th, and Grandma Lucy would assist with the preparations. Many close friends would join to celebrate the arrival of the new baby. Susie planned to take numerous photos, both indoors and outdoors, to commemorate the beginning of this new phase in her life.

She suddenly realized that she was no longer afraid of the changes that awaited her. Instead, she was filled with excitement and anticipation for the new year and the fresh start it represented. Susie envisioned helping Grandpa Ken boost the store's sales in 2021, setting a goal to double its success. She cherished her connection to the little mountain town and knew she had a lot of work ahead to make her dreams a reality.

Feeling that life was perfect and fantastic, Susie believed in the magic of Santa Claus. She considered Eggshell's lawyer as the real-life Santa Claus sent by a higher power to guide and support her.

As another guest arrived, Susie jotted down a few notes on a small piece of paper, dubbing it her "execution note." She felt confident in her ability to execute her plans, and she was determined to make it happen.

Susie noticed that she had gained more confidence over the past month, despite her changing appearance and the extra weight of pregnancy. Her spirits were high, and she looked forward to the challenges ahead.

In her solitude, Susie could almost sense the comforting aroma of Paul's hugs and the warmth of his presence. She imagined Grandpa Ken's joy upon seeing an increase in store sales and the relief of knowing that the loan was being paid off. She could also feel Hunter's excitement about starting kindergarten next semester. Susie even sensed her parents' happiness and the joy of her parents-in-law. Most importantly, she anticipated the arrival of the little golden egg, the gender of which remained a surprise she wanted to unveil. She couldn't wait to see what the future held.

